

CONNECTING HERITAGE

Sharing heritage perspective across different domains

What is heritage? It has come to be said in the far reaches of a long debate that "everything is heritage" and indeed observing the evolution of this concept over the last century it seems that even the ambition of international bodies such as UNESCO is to widen the concept of heritage. But beyond definitions, in actual practice heritage is the meeting ground of many humanistic and scientific disciplines that are dealing with the material and immaterial aspects of this complex concept. From the conservation and restoration of historic buildings to their reuse with new functions, from the discourse of identity to the debate on inclusion, from the protection of historic centres to the need of adapting them to climate change and new social demands.

The YADES project has approached the topic of heritage from the technical-scientific perspective of assessing and mitigating climate-related risks. This third conference and summer school is the continuation of the two previous ones focusing on risk assessment methods (YADES1stSS-Athens2021-Identification of methods for CH risks assessment) and on the inclusion of the landscape perspective in the heritage discourse (YADES2ndSS-Milano2022-The Culture of Heritage), we decided to create an opportunity to meet across different perspectives and professionalities working in the same field.

Organisers: Prof. Julia Nerantzia Tzortzi, associate professor - Maria Stella Lux, PhD candidate (POLIMI-ABC)

The question for everyone is: how can we bring the heritage perspective to the centre of methodologies and processes? That is, how can we make heritage not the object of our work, but the inspiring subject of our choices?

In particular, restricting the field of action to historic city centres, i.e. areas in which a large part of the material urban heritage is concentrated and which are generally protected as the expression of a city and living culture that is layered over the centuries, we would like to articulate the debate around

3 thematic areas:

- a. architecture and landscape of historical centres | how the theme of identity and the understanding of cultural value can become the basis of architectural/landscape design both for intervention on the existing and the integration of the new in historical contexts
- b. urban planning and adaptation strategies | how far are urban adaptation processes to CC also able to include historic centres? how to balance the needs of preservation and conservation with those of innovation and adaptation? How can greening strategies be developed in historic centres?
- c. risks evaluation and decision-making | How to include cultural value in risk assessment? how to include the heritage perspective in decision-making processes?
